GUNNAR ANDERSON Intern

Henry Gunnar Anderson is a senior at the University of Colorado at Boulder. He is interested in curation and education fronts afforded by the Atomic Museum. Gunnar grew up interested in military history due to intrigue from veteran family members, movies, and video games. He spends his time reading books and collecting antique and surplus military weapons as a way to be hands-on with what he reads about. He plans to get his Master's Degree in history with a potential focus on US action in the Second World War. When not in school, Gunnar lives in Henderson, Nevada, and sees museum work as a way to get others to see how interesting history is. Gunnar chose to intern at the Atomic Museum due to his love of military history, and his interest in the Manhattan Project and the US Army's Pentatomic army concept.

CORA MARINOS Intern

Cora is a student at UNLV majoring in Anthropology, focusing on Biological Anthropology and Archeology. They grew up in California but moved to Las Vegas two years ago to attend UNLV. Cora wants to work in a library or museum and is interested in getting her master's in Library and Information Sciences after finishing school at UNLV.

They have a cat named Ajax who likes to spend his free time doing the opposite of what you should do in a museum: eating paper. Cora, however, promises that she will not eat any paper during her internship at the Atomic Museum. Cora was interested in interning at the Atomic Museum because their grandpa used to work at the Nevada test site. They are excited to learn more about his work while interning at the Atomic Museum!

KEVIN SISEMORE Volunteer

Kevin Sisemore grew up in Livermore, California, just a mile down the road from the Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory. Kevin's father worked at LLNL from 1956 to 1988 and spent much of that time at the Nevada Test Site.

Kevin feels that the test site and atomic testing are part of his DNA. Kevin chose a path other than science, spending much of his career in accounting and finance ending up as the Chief Audit Executive at the University of Colorado.

After retiring, Kevin and his wife moved to Henderson. He has joined the Atomic Museum as a docent.
